Did you know ?

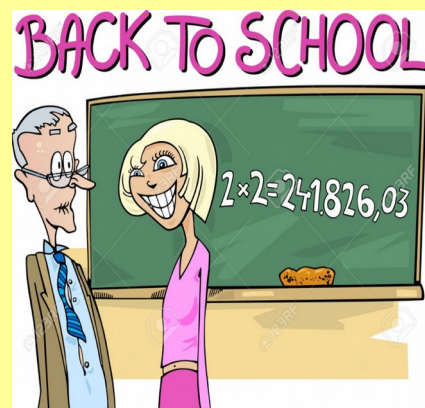

That's the question. First of all, in the morning, the American students recite the Pledge but in the UK, students do an assembly (they discuss important themes with the principal or their teachers first thing in the morning). The English students wear uniforms but in the USA, they wear uniforms only in the private schools. The English students go to school by regular buses but in America they go over there by school buses. American teachers mark with letters (A, B, C, D) but in the UK, students are scored with percentages.

But in France, it's different again : the French students start the day with a class and they don't wear uniforms. And it's not finished! Their buses are like English buses. Their marks are different too : they are marked with « twenty out of twenty »
